CIA Director Will Speak at War College

NEWPORT. — William Colby, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, is one of five scheduled speakers at the Naval War College's annual Current Strategy Forum which opens today.

Colby is scheduled to speak Thursday morning on "identification of national security problems."

Other speakers during the two-and-a-half-day event are scheduled to be William P. Clements Jr., Deputy Secretary of Defense, who will give the keynote address this afternoon; Adm. Thomas H. Moorer (ret.), former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and Lyman B. Kirkpatrick, former executive director of the CIA and now a Brown University professor.

The forum is the culmination of the academic year for the college's 424 students. Two hundred civilians, representing a cross section of professions, have also been invited. Thirty-two admirals and generals are expected to attend.
